- The Yellow River originates in Qinghai Province and flows eastward. At the junction of Qinghai, Gansu, and Sichuan provinces, it makes a dramatic turn, veering northwest and flowing back into Qinghai Province. After meandering for over 300 kilometers in Qinghai, it finally enters Gansu Province from the northeast. This nearly 180-degree bend at the tri-province junction is known as the "First Bend of the Yellow River," a geographical wonder. (Includes escalator access)

This area is not only an important national wetland reserve, but also an ideal place to observe the black-necked crane, a Class I protected animal in China. Huahu Lake is one of the larger lakes within the Ruoergai Wetland. Its waters flow into the Yellow River via the Heihe River, making it a natural reservoir for the Yellow River.
